I did not ask that specifically. I will see if the folks she delegated to respond then ask again.

It is true that the kings are down all around Alaska, though I have not heard about the Nushagak specifically. It is rare and a real thrill to get a king while dip netting.

But will they be submitting to the docket?

By the way, we heard the kings are down this year. Is that correct?

Here is the response from USGS.

I sent a note to Phil Brna to verify. He has not responded. The fish are in so he is probably out.
